Chamkar Opens Second Vegetarian Restaurant

Having made a name for itself by serving up affordable vegetarian fare, the owner of Chamkar Restaurant has opened a second sister eatery in Siem Reap called Chamkar House. Following the successful formula of the first restaurant, located in The Passage in the heart of the Old Town, Chamkar House opens in a traditional wooden house off National Road 6. With air-con upstairs, the new branch is housed within a more relaxed garden setting than its livelier counterpart. Similarly packed with vegetarian Khmer flavours, the menu at Chamkar House also introduces some new dishes for its diners such as amok gnocchi.

New Bakery at The RiverGarden

If the tropical hideaway of The RiverGarden and its free swimming pool isn't tempting enough, the opening of a new bakery-café at the front of this well-established small hotel will draw you in with wafts of home-made cakes and sweet treats. Australian owner Deborah Saunders, a trained chef with an extensive culinary career, is responsible for the variety of indulgent western goodies available at the riverfront café. Labels on the baked goods with messages like 'Hey, there's a party going on in my mouth' might just help you decide what to choose.

Environmentally Friendly E-Bikes

Saving the strain of constant pedaling, zipping around the temples of Angkor just became easier thanks to the launch of Cambodia's first electric bike company, Green E-Bike. The quiet, emission-free e-bikes are environmentally friendly, propounding a sustainable solution to air pollution. The easy-to-ride bikes run on rechargeable batteries and can reach a range of 40 kilometres, which covers the core sites of the Angkor Archaeological Park. The bikes can run at 20km per hour without using pedals. Neither a driving license nor previous experience is required to enjoy the simple fun of these power-assisted e-bikes. For more information, visit <http://www.greene-bike.com/>
